

Create a Just Society in Peace

My help comes from the Lord, the maker of heaven and earth, Psalm 121: 2. The best way to create a just society is through our faith and with the help of our Lord. One of our many role models is Martin Luther King, who idolized peace in the creation of a society. Three simple steps are evangelization, motivation, and change. These steps will help peacefully create a just society.

The first step is evangelization. This requires education about our Father and prayer to aid us in our attempt to bring change. Our main priority is to spread the good news of our faith to others, particularly the three greatest virtues: faith, hope, and love, I Corinthians 13: 13. The truth of the Paschal mystery alone should astound them and encourage them to find out more.

The second step is motivation. You must be optimistic to complete this step. When the person you are trying to convert or gain a faith is educated in our religion, that person will be motivated to do God's will. They will gain faith through Christianity, hope for a brighter and more peaceful society, and most importantly, they will gain love for peace and one another.

The last step is change. Change is the most difficult step due to the required sacrifice included. Since the person is educated in our religion and motivated to do God's will, they will be baptized and join the Christian faith. This change is difficult, as it is to stop habits, and it requires a large commitment to participate in Mass weekly, but it brings joy, happiness, and peace to our world.

The number one way to create a just society is through our Christian faith. We should all be good stewards and play our role as a Christian to pursue the dream of a peaceful world. A good society is vital for lasting peace so we should cooperate in the construction of this society.
